Achievement Gap in Public School Education Ndieze Nnawuchi

Over the last one hundred years, scholars, parents, and politicians have theorized about the cause of the achievement gap between white students and their minority counterparts in the United States K-12 school systems. While a variety of solutions have been proposed and implemented, the gap has continued to persist. Why does this gap exist in the United States? How does the United States educational model compare to the efforts of other nations throughout the world? How much longer can the United States continue to throw money at the achievement gap problem? Author Ndieze Nnawuchi proposes new possibilities for why this gap exists as well as refuting some commonly perceived notions in his thesis, The Achievement Gap in Public Schools . He closely examines the cultural context of education in the United States and how that affects educational outcomes, leading to the development of a new educational model.
