Este sistema individual para el tratamiento de las aguas residuales producidas por las familias que habitan en zonas residenciales poco pobladas, en ciudades donde no existe acceso a otros sistemas colectivos de tratamiento, también se utiliza para el tratamiento de efluentes provenientes de instituciones como escuelas y hospitales de pequeñas comunidades.

Es un sistema de tratamiento apropiado para lugares que cuentan con abastecimiento domiciliario de agua (cañería), donde el agua llega en forma permanente y suficiente. Este sistema puede recibir todas las aguas residuales tanto el agua con los excrementos humanos como la proveniente de cocinas y baños (aguas pardas de los inodoros y aguas grises).

Este sistema utiliza la capacidad que tiene el suelo para absorber.

Por lo tanto, su buen funcionamiento depende de que el tanque sedimentador cumpla apropiadamente con la retención de los sólidos más pesados y de las grasas, así como de que los terrenos donde se colocan estos sistemas de tratamiento tengan la capacidad de permitir que se infiltre el agua.
